POWER GIVEN BY FIRST HAND EXPERIENCE IN RELIGION

"Don't Quote Other's Doubts,"

Dray Gilkie.

Meeting Street Old People.

We Americans of the twentieth century have a strong way of thinking that as long as a man is an author on motion or the evolution of the solar system he is competent to pass judgment on religion, said Dr. Charles Gilkie, of the Hyde Park Baptist Church, Chicago, speaking in chapel last Sunday evening.

"It is of all things, the most first hand," Dr. Gilkie declared. "The only persons competent to pass judgment on it are those who know something of it from personal or official experience. We recognize this principle in other fields. We ask a poet to fix an automobile. Religion at first hand is one of the powerful forces in the world today. Dray Gilkie showed only those who merely repeat formulæ cannot classically to make it. It is the very secret of victory over the 'evil spirits' which may come in the forms of passion and appetite, temper and tongue, or in the smaller forms of what we of the twentieth century call 'nerve.'"

"Whither," said Dr. Gilkie, speaking directly to the students, "we are in the stage of inherited beliefs, or whether we are questioning for the first time the broad field of religion, we who are contemporary with the God provided we use the first person. There are people on every college campus who go around and call themselves 'atheists.' They never find a solution. You can always find a solution to your own doubts provided you are sincere. And the solution you work out for yourself is a thousand times more valuable to yourself and to your own day than the truth you gather from others."

"If a scientist in the laboratory," said Dr. Gilkie, "you can work out your solution by direct action on the best knowledge of which you are master; all you have to remember is that Jesus was a very good man, follow Him for that, and in the midst of your mortal battle you will find yourself understanding the arms of the Almsgiver. If all you can say is, 'I know it is wrong while trying to help people to live happier lives,' go on to work on that."
