OPINION

4-Day Thanksgiving Would Be Fairer, Happier; Avoid Past Confusion

We, the undersigned, are of the opinion that the plan for classes on Friday for the 4-day Thanksgiving Day has not been successful. The original intention of this plan was to have classes on the semester before Christmas vacation. It was believed that Friday classes would cause more women to formerly remain at college over this holiday. However, at this time, some students still attempt to take their Thanksgiving vacation, returning on Friday for a class of two hours, and leaving again immediately. The necessity of confusion, and the unpreparedness of the students, is immense. Thus, we believe that the plan for four-day Thanksgiving vacation should be restored this year.

From the point of view of students who do remain at college over Thanksgiving, the system seems not only inefficient but unfunctional. It is not possible to be with their families on this traditional holiday and observe all of the customs of their homes. For these reasons we believe that every four-day Thanksgiving vacation should be restored this year.

The publication of the International Student Service's new magazine, "Student Times," if it lives up to its aim, affords an infrequent cross section of student literary activity. It has been started, states its editor, Irving Ross, as "a non-partisan, non-religious inter-collegiate journal devoted to the publication of the best student output in the way of articles, fiction, verse, reviews." Its major objective is to "arouse these literary talents, to provide a medium for their first trial flights" as well as to "establish contact between the older and the younger generation." This latter aim is evidenced in this issue by contributions from Eleanor Rosenweig, Max Leader, and Daniel Boyington.

On this whole is taken in with educational problems and interests. There are articles on Wisconsin and Antioch colleges written by students, a criticism of big business tactics in universities by Daniel Boyington, Mrs. Roosevelt's contribution, "If I Were an Abridger, The New Junior Professional Assistant Jobs in the Civil Service," a sketch of the Student Opinion Surveys of America and the development and work of the work, and also an article by recent college graduates. The one article on world affairs is an appreciation of the internal dichotomy in China. Two stories, several poems, and two short articles on books and music complete the table of contents. On perusing this it can be seen that out of a total of fifteen contributions, of which there are nine full length articles, eight of the articles are on educational problems an co-operative educational project, which merits general support throughout the industrial disorganization of the world.

Freshman Tennis Cup
Acquired by England in Three Hard Sets

Thursday, October 6.—A long, grueling tennis singles' final climaxcd the first successful Freshman Tennis Tournament since 1910. Favored by good weather, the quarterfinals, semifinals, and the final match were played entirely in the sun.

In the quarterfinals, tournament was won 2-6, 6-2, 6-0 after two hours of play.

Walker showed more endurance and drive to win the first set with inferior placements. England had excellent form, but her swing was not forceful, and she netted many shots. The second set, found her battling out with added confidence.

Walker, however, returned the ball breadth and force from all parts of the court, and the rallies were long. But the effort must have been tiring, as England ran the score up to 4-4 in the final set before Walker regained her scoring ability. Then showing amazing steadiness and pluck, she cut England's lead down to 5-4, staved off two match points, evened the score at 5-5, and went on to lead 6-5, 6-3 in the win. Walker proved her mettle by Chrisi Waples, 42, and a picture was taken of the finalists to record the event.

Walker "great type of girl and sportsman," both for the sake of variety and to get an insight into student opinion and thought, which it is to be hoped, is not completely imbecile in its own affairs.

I. S. S.
ITS THRESHOLD
By Barbara Herman, '43

"I found Hudson Shores Labor School, its values, creeds and nationalities can live together, face their problems and learn. But the worker’s dream realized." Alberta Hinds wrote this— a Southern Tennes- sian— in a letter which she received after attending the 1933 session of Hudson Shores Labor School.

Shore School Labor School is an outgrowth of an idea which Miss M. Carney Thomas had in the early days of Bryn Mawr College. She visualized a school helping working girls to understand the industrial problems which are so great a part of their lives. She saw the Bryn Mawr campus as the site to be utilized in this project during the summer. The idea gathered force and enthusiasm, and the Bryn Mawr School for Women in Industry was begun.

The school moved to West Park, N. Y. home, and renamed Hudson School Labor School, the school continuous as one of the country’s leading experiences in labor education. It is a place where paid wage work, and since its inception, the school and its teachers have learned much. Methods and even objectives in the field of workers' education have been changed.

Each session is a new experiment, and helps women from different industries and in different areas of work. Students have had various backgrounds, varied training. But one thing is true of all them. Their experience is wide and rich. They have worked in steel mills, baking shops, leather factories. They have been domestic servants, beauty opera- tors, restaurant workers. Their experience is the material which the teachers at Hudson Shores Labor School use in their courses in English, Dramatic Science and Economics.

In these days of daily classes the more abstract learning emerges. Jenny is a sharecropper, and from Jenny what says about the price of cotton and the price of meat in Arkansas, the concept of real wages, cost of living, standards of living are made clear and graphic. Alice works in a large steel mill. Her description of its organization is illustrative material for practical teaching in up-to-the-minute economics.

So much of the experience which the girls relish in classes in dramatic material that there is 10-15 per cent of a subject matter in order to produce a play at Hudson Shore. Helen's adventures at the Bulova Watch Company, where Genevieve decided to join her union, are so clearly drawn up in a reflec- tive form. Dramatics is used, too, as an instrument of teaching, co-ordinating material and making visual such problems as the machinery of a minimum wage board.

This summer was highlighted by visits of prominent leaders in many fields. Mark Star, director of cultural activities for the I. L. W. W., Max Lerner, Mabel Leach, and the New York State Labor Relations Board, spent weekends at West Park. Mrs. Roosevelt invited the entire school to her Hyde Park home. She met the girls informally, and lent bathing outfits which were soon in her pool served for cream. She gathered them around her on the lawn and chatted easily with them about civilian defense, labor and the war.

Bryn Mawr maintains an active interest in the Hudson Shore Labor School. Miss Park is a member of its Board of Directors; Miss Fairchild is on its teaching staff. Two undergraduate assistants, this year Judy Bregman and Joan Gross, joined the "old guard" ranks of the school. With girls from Wellesley, Mt. Holyoke, Smith and Con- necticut College for Women, the undergraduates assist the staff, learn much from the practical experience of the working girls students.

The college has contributed to the support of the school for many years. Your contribution through the Act- ivities Drive will help support the co-operative educational project, which needs general support throughout the industrial disorganization of the world.
MacVeigh's Picnic at Potsdam as Germany Invades Russia, Ride Troop Train to Berlin

By Barbara Cooley, ’42

It started in the fall of 1939 as a normal Junior year abroad, studying in Athens, living at the home of a Swiss official. Peggy approached him and asked in her best German if she might smoke. He smiled, replying in French, “Mais oui, mademoiselle, c’est possible, il est.” After that they took trains. Trains to Ganeva, trains through occupied France where they had to eat miserable food in little stations where French officials were supervised by Germans. Trains to Madrid where Peggy collapsed on the streets from starvation, where grass grew over hard wire and trenches which still surround the city and where after two years no repairs have been made to bombed buildings. One American said, “They don’t want to rebuild University City (main battlefield of the siege of Madrid). The Spanish bite the come out here for picnics on Sunday. They like to pick up all the bones.”

Finally a train to Lisbon, which is “beautiful and full of food.” Peggy described it as the “listening post of Europe,” now full of Germans and English and spies. “Everyone you know in Europe is there now, or has just left, or is arriving in a few days.” On the other end, a route to New York, the only sign of war was one American exclamation before the count of Remonds.

its beginning, since no Sinagua site antedating 700 A. D. had ever been dug.
This summer the Bryn Mawr archaeologists explored the earliest stage of the Sinagua sequence, which they named the Park Focus. They excavated remains of houses which had been built slightly below the former surface of the ground but which are now covered with about five feet of earth. On the hard packed clay floors and in the earth outside the houses they found pottery, stone axes, corn grinders, a few shell ornaments and a pipe and other artifacts. Most of the pottery was the Rio de la Plata type, but there was also some grey and black-on-grey pottery traded from the Anasazi, who were evidently then in the late Basket Maker III stage of culture. Just at the turn to Pueblo I. Preserved charcoal found in the ruins it is hoped will date the site when the Museum had hoped.

Attention, Bryn Mawters
Anyone who would like some sort of identification for her class blazer other than an athletic word should get in touch with a member of the Athletic Association Board soon. A small and simple "R. M. C." cut from yellow felt has been made up in sample form and placed on the athletic Bulletin Board in Taylor. If interest is shown, an order will be placed and the insignia sold at cost—not over 60 cents.
