Beautiful Costumes With Historical Interest Donated
The Theatre Workshop, October 21—The costume committee of Miss Oita Skinner's committee to the Miss Oita Skinner Memorial Workshop was featured at a meeting on Saturday afternoon. Among the costumes is a roman velvet trimmed with black which Mr. Skinner was at East of Italy when he played with Mme. Medjeska in Merry Wives in 1893. Another costume, the toreadors worn by Mrs. Skinner in the part of a young boy are among the interesting items included in the collection. Displayed with a group of other clothing are costumes in which Mr. Skinner were, for Mexican matadors by a Madrid designer. The collection, 18 costumes, is beautiful as well as of historical interest to theatre enthusiasts.

President McBride introduced Robert Maxwell, unofficial President. After Miss Oita Young's tribute to the great Matador, Mr. Maxwell expressed interest about her father's stage career. She told how Mme. Helen Todd, mother of Miss Marian Todd, had introduced her to Madame and how Mrs. Oita Mattson id later who became her husband. The collection is a very delightful one of place where I'd rather have those costumes, said Miss Oita.

Our Governor, Mr. MacNell, was walking past the old barn which has been transformed into the Theatre Workshop, had often expressed the wish that a little theatre might be built there. Many persons are interested in the project.

Commenting on a dagger which Miss Oita Young gave to Miss Oita, Miss Skinner related the story of her only appearance in Shakespeare. She had continued on Page 4.

A new social and political Monitors Necessary?

Last year the News advocated the abolition of a monitoring system which is often inefficient and unnecessarily expensive to the Undergraduate Association and paradoxical in a college with liberal institutions such as those of Bryn Mawr. Since the issue is not one which should be disregarded, we again propose the establishment of a system of unlimited cuts for all classes in all courses.

Such a program is the only consistent with Bryn Mawr's policy of responsibility for the individual student.

We feel that the responsibility for attending class rested entirely with the student. Emphasis should be placed, more heavily than now it is, on comprehension of material in the course. Any student prepared to do advanced academic work should be able to take full responsibility for regular attentide of courses in which she is studying. If definite rules and practices are omitted in a system which absolves monitors, the pressures would intensify the results obtained in the primary interest. and the only interest of a student in class should be her work. The aim of the present cut system is obtained to maintain the quality of work, but it does not place the emphasis upon the courses themselves. The same end can be achieved, without the establishment of a definite quota of cuts, by dealing individually with the student whose work is unsatisfactory.

A system of unlimited cuts would establish a system of personal naturalness for attending class—For the professor, as well as for the student, the new system would be an improvement, since he could feel that the student's relation to her work represented more than sitting through a certain number of hours of class.

The inadequacy of the present system is shown by numerous examples of mistakes made by the monitors. When a definite number of cuts is "allowed," the impulse to take as many cuts as possible is fostered.

The system of unlimited cuts is successfully used at other colleges. It should be obvious that there would be no unnecessary cutting by students who were taking a course seriously or intended to pass it. Especially in advanced courses, reasonably regular attendance is essential; and if the courses are serious in interest, they should, cutting, be at a minimum.

At a time when individual responsibility tends of particular importance, and when Bryn Mawr’s while policy emphasizes this responsibility, it seems to us that this should be directed, not toward an artificial standard set up by the administration, but toward the real standards which we ourselves wish to maintain.

On Friday night I attended a meeting at the Academy of Music, sponsored by the United Committee for a Second Front of the Federal Council of Labor, to protest against American support of industrial Organizations and Railrood Brothers. The speeches, of course, were concerned mainly with the question of a Second Front and American Labor, and all implicitly had as their bases the philosophy of this war propagated by Vice President Wallace in his "Century of the Common Man" speech. Many phases of the war were discussed, but I would like to focus attention on one of them.
