System Adopted To Restrict Use of College Coal

Nepper Asks Reduced Use of Electricity by Students

Goodhart, November 26. The seriousness of the coal situation calls for cunning and discipline. Nepper proposes to conserve the college coal by issuing special permits to students who desire to use the lights in their rooms. Since the duration of the strike cannot be known at this time, conservation is required to stretch the present supply throughout the winter, if necessary.

Visa to Talk On Newly-Found Text by Malory

After nearly 450 years in which most students of English literature have been puzzled by the Mystery of Gawain and the Green Knight, Professor Malory of Bryn Mawr's greatest creative activity, absolutely unique as a college celebration, which should be a public event may be kept alive. She added that be needed to produce necessary college spirit, Big May Day would bring the to the attention of all. She also believed that only May Day has been a popular subject in the Fellows Library of Winchester College. This has been the subject of Professor Malory's study of the original text, which he has known for several years. He added that Professor Malory has been working on the text for many years and has been working on it since he was a student. He has been working on the text for several years and has been working on it since he was a student. Crocce as Critic: Analyzed in Talk by Mr. Gianturco

"Crocce's literary criticism is a harbinger of a new type of Critic, one who is not satisfied with the traditional method of criticism but is interested in the study of the critical, philosophical, and historical aspects of literature. His criticism is based on a close study of the critical sources and on a penetrating analysis of the historical background of the texts he is studying. His work is characterized by a deep understanding of the texts he is studying, and by a remarkable ability to see beyond the surface of the texts to the deeper meanings and implications of the authors' intentions. His criticism is not only a study of literature but also a study of the history of ideas and of the development of thought over the centuries. His work has been widely influential and has had a profound impact on the development of literary criticism in the 20th century."

B.M. Fund Plan, Students' Quota Made for Year

$7,500 to be Raised By Undergrads This Year

$12,000 has been set as the under- graduates' quota for the Bly Fund, which has just been estab- lished by the Student Body. The quota is to be raised over the next year, the Committee hoping to raise $7,500 this year and the remainder next year.

System Designed to Restrict Use of College Coal

The system adopted to restrict the use of college coal is as follows:

- Use of coal will be limited to essential activities from 6 a.m. to 10 p.m. and all lights turned out; and all electrical equipment.
- The gymnasium, the dining hall, and the student union will be kept alive.
- The committee also encouraged activities from 6 a.m. to 10 p.m.
- The possibility of using solar power was also considered.

Students' Concert To Benefit Fund

A program of music to be given on December 12, at 8 o'clock, in the Gregory Chapel, will be given by the Chorus and by the Varsity Players. Proceeds of the joint concert will be given to the College's quota. The Junior Show has contributed approximately $250, while the Varsity Players estimate profits of approximately $125 from the concert.

The Undergraduate Committee for the Fund, headed by Mr. Anna Chase, has been selected through the Undergraduate Association, and includes Margaret Martin, '48, Elizabeth Adams, '48, Mary Gregory, '48, and Margaret Hayes, '48.

Princeton Men Beat B. M. Team; Fight to Close Finish in Hockey

Among critics of "Exterminate!" and "When White was Wearing," the Bly-Maw Hockey Team threw itself into the fight to show the Ivy Clubhow to really play hockey. And they succeeded, for only barely did their opponents win in the last five minutes.

The Prince was given credit for being "the only Ivy team to win.

No team that all Ivy men as they were proved to be beyond a doubt. The Princeton boys were reckoned as more than a "practically game," as the Prince put it.

The Princeton boys, hurling such epithets as "meanies," when B.M. put up the score 3-1, were finally humbled as they were laughed at.

Implications of the Coal Strike

Mr. Lewis' coal crisis, coming at a time when the world's economy is just beginning to gain momentum in peace-time fields again, poses a threat which cannot be ignored. Not only is Mr. Lewis' coal crisis a challenge to capitalism, but it has brought into sharp focus the non-use of labor unions and the Government's cases must be debated by legal experts fully acquainted with labor and contract law. To the general public, it is enough to say that each side has a legal argument, or the case would not have been tried. Ms. Chase, as chairman of the Board of Education, has reached the conclusion that the average citizen is whether one individual, Mr. Lewis, can take upon himself the responsibility of negotiating a contract which a labor union has decided to paralyze national economy at a critical moment both in the country and in the world.

It is interesting, perhaps even significant, that the publicity on the strike has concentrated upon the legal position of both sides, and not upon the grievances, just or otherwise, which have been cited as cause for breaking the contract in the first place. In one respect this is good, as it stresses the need, more apparent than ever since V-J Day, for a re-definition of the legal position of unions since that laid down by the Wagner Labor Relations Act. But this legal emphasis is tending to obscure the economic relationship of both this and other recent strikes; for the strike is also a test of the precepts which have hitherto governed the operation of the capitalist economy. Labor has hitherto been considered as mere 'productive factors' in the Machine; as the labor union is accepted as the sole or main factor of labor, the working of a labor union is becoming accepted, the role of labor as an organization, rather than as a commodity, must be regarded.

The fact that one individual can, by such action as Mr. Lewis in the coal strike, make the entire society, and every citizen in the United States calls for a reconsideration of the nature of individual democracy. It has been the tendency of the world's economy, for the past twenty years, to be dominated by individualism rather than by society; but the individual cannot exist without society, and individual rights will become self-destructive if they are not exercised with regard to the rights of society.

of Park Hall, to house the Department of Biology, Physics, and Mathematics. This would release space in Dalby Hall to ease the present overcrowding in classrooms and offices in Taylor and the Library. Funds are also needed for new language houses. to expand present facilities.

The Alumnae Fund organization, which is conducting its drive without the aid of any outside Fund raising group, is headed by Mrs. P. Louise Rhoad, as National Chairman, and Mrs. Claudine Collins, as Executive Director. The organization is divided into District Councillors, and local and district fund chairmen, with subcommittees for benefits, entertainment, publicity, alumnae gifts, outside gifts, legacies, and gifts in kind (silver, china, etc.). Any contributions which students can make of gifts in kind will be extremely helpful; the Philadelphia headquarters of the Drive, on the 8th floor of Wanamakers, is planning a pre-May Day sale of these.

that the meaning is lost and the spirit is artificial.

"Why work a whole year for two days of good weather?" when student interest has diminished, the financial risk is so great, and the needs relatively small. For example, the profit of the 1936 May Day was only $100, the smallest ever returned except in 1932. She admitted the publicity value of May Day, but insisted that an arthritis festival is not needed to show our interest in the liberal arts. "Our days should be on the future; there is no better publicity for a liberal college."

Near 'Hannihilation' of Haverford Results in Tie Hockey Game, 1-1

By Helen Martin '49

Loftily securing the Haverford claim of a moral victory, the second hockey team of Bryn Mawr emerged from the battle of last Monday, declaring themselves, by virtue of this unique game, unbeaten by any boys' team in this fall season. Meanwhile the Haverfords returned to Haverford with the satisfaction of three goals to Bryn Mawr's one, even if thoseissy officialis' decreed two goals. All this as a result of poor officiating of the officials had to discredit some of the better swings with a whistle and a warning of "Stickul" more than a few times during the game. The stamina evidenced in Haverford's playing was obviously derived from sideline stimuli—not only from the cheering of a large official, but also from a large pug of chutes, each with a full cigarette before he entered the game, lighting a cigarette as he picked up a hockey stick.

B.M. Teams Win Hockey Victories

Three victories, two for the first team and one for the second, brought the formal hockey season to a climactic and satisfying close with a record of only two defeats, the first two matches, for the varsity. In these last matches, the first and second teams defeated Rosemont 1-0, and 4-0 respectively on November 20, and the first team won a decisive victory over the Merion Cricket Club, 6-2, on Thursday, November 26.

In the Rosemont match, Silver Hayson scored the only point of the game in the second half. The Merion Cricket Club was particularly noteworthy in that the two points for Merion were both scored by Bob Bisig, second string Bryn Mawr center forward who, with Betty Foccardi, acted as substitute for the Merion Cricket Club, which did not have a full team present.

Haverford Victor in Hockey Match

The Haverford soccer team, showing more power than the highly-skilled football team, went away with Monday's game to the surprising score of 6-0. The year's first cold weather, kept spectator attendance at a low level; few from either college were present to watch the best of the recent post-season hockey games. The game was less spectacular from the onlooker's point of view; the picturesque foiling of anticipated games was comparatively non-existent, as the soccer team, already accustomed to a hockey lineup, quickly accustomed itself to handling a hockey stick. The Bryn Mawr team worked as a whole, but Haverford's forceful drives, speedy if penalized dribbling and scrappy stickwork resulted in the impounded score. The half-time rest period was eliminated, and the last period shortened because of the cold.
