Parade Night Completes Hectic Week

For '59

Freshman Week is rapidly drawing to a close, but some of the more general and traditional experiences still lie ahead for the Class of '59.

The first of these is Miss McBride's tea for all freshmen, Sunday afternoon, to be held in the home of the President. One of the final official "welcomes," but one of the warmest and most gracious, will be extended to the Class of '59 by Miss McBride.

The first chapel service of the year will be held in the evening at 7:30 in the Music Room. Rev. Robert James will be the speaker. At 8 p.m. upserclassmen will begin returning to the halls. This annual activity, which will continue through Monday, will be marked by much excitement and curiosity, but with general good feeling. Pre- viously deserted rooms will be explored and settled, and civilization will grow and flourish along the corridors.

Also on Sunday night, at 9:15 to 10 o'clock, one of the newer Bryn Mawr traditions will make its first appearance before the freshmen. The Soda Fountain, equipped with hoagies, ice cream and sticky buns, will begin another year of offering food and comfort to the Bryn Mawr student.

Monday morning, medical and mental examinations will continue, and in the afternoon the athletes will practice.

---Freshmen Are On The Run

With Exams, Meetings

"A senior! I thought you were a freshman!"... Omgosh, I've missed my voice test... No, really...

I don't have my mother..."

The comments heard during the first few days of Freshman Week were typical of new class, as well as new freshmen.

But in spite of the customary confusion, the class of '59 lived through the period of Sept. 28-Oct. 1... and even enjoyed it.

The halls opened to the incoming freshmen were fresh and brightly painted. They are assigned to a classmate and given a complete "Villit," by the Preaident, which will include a "Guide to the Towns" and a "Village Directory." The freshmen were rushed through introductions, appointments, interviews and teas until their heads were spinning. The tea for freshmen the afternoon of Sunday the 29th gave a welcome interlude in the day's activities.

The evening of their first day at college brought the meeting with members of the Class of '59, the Association, at which president Jean McAleer '59 outlined the plans and methods of the organization.

Following meetings in the halls with wardens and hall presidents, members of the class of '59 were entertained with games and the memorable class and college songs.

Nottings and Tents

Friday brought more tests and a few appointments, and in the afternoon, the first meeting of the freshmen as a class. The explanation of the many clubs, and the various procedures was followed by the election of the first temporary singing-masters.

At the curriculum committee tea, Thursday afternoon, the freshmen attempted to pick up a few pointers about a possible major. The day ended with the rewarding experience of an exhausting scavenger hunt and the traditional picnic supper in Apple Barn.

Coming in like a lion, Saturday started off with the French lunch, games exam in Taylor, and the freshmen were given their first glimpse of the gym suit. The contest on sports continued, after a brief pause for lunch, with hockey tryouts. The efforts of the prospective players was rewarded at the start of the Friday party.

Freshman Mixer

Question of how to sign out and what to wear to the mixer was all the rage. As the first mixer was held in the special Haverford College "wells" a warning was issued to be sure that the gym and Radnor's open house introduced the class of '59 to the Radnors and it's honors system of 2.50 permission.

With only 60 points it is agreed that Freshman Week has been fun, but the seniors hope the class of '59 finds the weekend an even more stimulating...

"Taylor Bookshop" Modernized; Moves To Larger Quarters In Old Psych. Lab.

Buying books this fall in the new and larger bookshop will be a real pleasure. The bookshop is now located behind Marion Hall in what was previously the undergaduate psychology lab. Gay and cheerful are the only words to describe the interior of the bookshop, with its green astroturf, tile floor and light-colored walls, and Mrs. Nahm and her staff are being. "We hope all the textbooks we need will be here, but we don't want all of the trimmings yet," said Mrs. Nahm. She emphasized the fact that the popular Please list answer here humor and art shelves will be con

Current Enrollment Largest In History.

The largest number of students in Bryn Mawr's history, 176, will be enrolled this fall. The previous high was in 1942 when the enrollment was 164.

The undergraduate enrollment is up, broken down to 96 freshmen, 40 non-residents, 9 junior year abroad and 5 senior year away.

There are 12 upperclassmen transfers, which added to the 166 freshmen means that 176 students will be starting classes at Bryn Mawr for the first time on Tuesday.

There's nothing like a 50 million times a day at home, at work or while at play.
NEWS Furnishes Fun, Experiencing

To all of the ex-newspaper editors, copy readers, feature writers, reporters and the inexperinced but enthusiastic freshmen who have said, "I'm interested in working on the News," the Newseditors an especially hearty welcome. We are very much interested in you, too, for new faces and new ideas are necessary on the paper if it is to continue to inform and entertain. Also, if you are interested in becoming the members of a constantly changing college communication.

At present, the News, like the freshmen, is in an organizational state. In addition to covering regular campus news, the paper plans to devote a much greater percentage of its pages to "critical writing" than has been done in the past. By "critical writing" is meant such fields as book, theatre, movie, and music reviews; political analyses; discussions of current campus problems, and so forth. These topics have all been included in the News many times before, of course, but this year we plan to make them regular rather than irregular features.

The News feels that the increased scope of the paper will make it possible for more persons with more varied backgrounds to work on the paper. The freshmen who would not be interested in reporting the number of new books in the library might be interested in reviewing one of these books, for example.

This year "tryouts" for the paper will be revised somewhat to allow students with specific interests to try out for different departments of the paper. The girl who is interested in news reporting will turn in several news articles to earn a place on the paper. The girl who would be interested in working with theatre and movie reviews, would try out for a position of a Philadephia play, or of a new and important movie. The student who is interested in political writing would turn in an article dissussing a current national problem. The freshman who would like to write in several fields could turn in several different articles. Several weeks are allowed for students to write their tryouts, which are then judged by the editorial board. When the board selects a student to the editorial staff, she then takes part in staff meetings and is eligible herself for the policy-making editorial board after one semester.

A meeting to discuss tryouts and arrange the tryout dates will be held on Thursday, October 8, at 4:00 in the News room. Any interested freshmen, with or without previous experience, is invited and urged to come to the meeting.

Students interested in proofreading and heading writing rather than news writing, are also invited to the meeting.

L. Breuer Heads
Freshman Week

"A miniature of college life" is the way in which Louise Breuer describes Freshman Week. The High senior is head of this year's Freshman Week Committee, a job which she feels is "the most recorded on campus."

"Freshman Week is an opportunity for new students to become acquainted with the people of the college, and the surroundings," reminded Louise, "It is an important function for normal college life."

The club heads a Freshman Week Committee of 86 students, and she in turn was responsible to Sarah Stisher, the President of the Undergraduate Association.

Student Enrolled
Through Tutoring

In addition to welcoming fresh-mans and transfer students, the College is also very happy to welcoming some of the Freshman Mauw's to the ranks. Ann is not actually being added to "the Mauw," but she might say she is "in many ways like the Mauw.," as she explains.

Ann, who graduated from Radnor High School this spring, has not attended regular classes since she was 16, when she was stricken with bulimic-political palsy. This fall she plans to be tutored in two courses at Bryn Mauw's, and she "might add something later, depending on how it works out."

Ann, who plans to study business English and a French course, was visited regularly by Bryn Mauw professor. Ann expects to venture "bit by bit" into her college career, and she doesn't have any definite plans for other courses or graduation at the present although she is very much interested in writing.

Ann has driven around the campus, and hopes to return again in winter while visiting various campuses and activities. A very charming Lucas, J.
